China: The human rights policies are questionable but the relations are good.
The communist economic model does not present (significant) threats in this case.

Kuwait, Liberia, Mauritania, Morroco, y Pakistan: They have accomplished many goals towards democracy.

Colombia: Shares the faith in freedom, the will to defend it, and the trust in freedom defining the future in the region. Strong fight against narcotraffic.

Perú: Good commercial partner.

India: Good work relations to intercept the illicit flow of substances across Indian borders.

Japón: Used to be an enemy. Today is allied with the US.

Germany: Used to be an enemy. Today, is allied with the US.

Under observation

Russia: Historic enemy of the United States, began to share business and economic policies with the “free world”. Its recent reaction against Georgia´s efforts to get closer to western countries shows that Russia still seeks to control Eastern Europe.

Brazil : One of the world´s strongest economies despite being a third world country. It has a good commercial relation with the US, but its interest in making the Mercosur an integral force to allow South America to grow, goes against american interests.

Argentina: Despite not being an influential economy in the world, being Mercosur´s second strongest member, and the third strongest economy of Latinamerica, could become dangerous if it strenghtens the bonds with Brazil to make the region grow.
